Effectiveness

The two-year project, ‘International JC Chef’, was launched in 2013 with the funding supporting from the University Grants Committee. The project was coordinated by two consecutive terms of Tutorial Team of the Hong Kong Institute of Education Jockey Club Student Quarters of Hong Kong Institute of Education, with a series of activities to promote a sense of cultural diversity, as well as creating cultural integration among student residents. Through various kinds of cooking activities, culture exchange and integration within student hostel have been successfully promoted and facilitated, interactions between local and non-local students have been enhanced through cooking – a common language among nations.

Experience Sharing

Cookery connects people together whereas cuisine sharing helps facilitating internationalisation, for the nature of food always go beyond any visible and invisible borders shaped by our races, nationalities and culture backgrounds. The moment when the unforgettable aroma clean our spirits, when the fantastic taste embrace our buds, or when the instant wonderful appearance catches our attention, will inevitably induce us to be intoxicated and roamed in the ocean of cuisines. It is cookery that links us together, makes us speak out about our originalities, and sticks us to be a great family. Cooking can be regarded as a process of education in which every one of us learns to make contributions and conduct communication and spirit of sharing, which are just matching three vital steps of our cooking sharing night: preparation and group discussion, cooking process and food sharing sessions.
